CHINA – Q1 2024 OVERVIEW

In Q1 2024, there have been more measures taken by various parties to support the market: (1) regulators have introduced trading restrictions on quantitative funds and domestic funds, (2) government funds have been buying ETFs, and (3) listed companies have stepped up buyback and shareholder return plans. We believe these should help to put a floor on the market, and the worst of the outflows should be behind us.

Aside from the stock market measures, investors are looking for more support for the economy. The annual policy meeting “Two Sessions” was in March 2024, with a growth target of “around 5%” widely expected. In our view, this is not an easy target to achieve, and policymakers will need to roll out more measures to support the economy. We believe their focus will be on industrial and technological upgrading, as well as investment, and these will be supported by fiscal policies. While the “Two Sessions” will only set broad targets, more details will be announced by various government agencies over the coming weeks, and these could provide catalysts for the sectors that will be emphasized.

We expect more policy focus to steer China’s economy towards its 5% growth target in 2024. By providing exposure to 80 industry leaders across 12 sectors, the Lion-OCBC Securities China Leaders ETF is well-positioned to ride on China’s long-term growth story.

HOW DOES THE BENCHMARK INDEX AND ETF COMPARE WITH OTHER CHINA-FOCUSED INDICES AND ETFs SINCE INCEPTION?

Despite the overall Chinese market volatility in Q1 2024, the Hang Seng Stock Connect China 80 Index (the Benchmark Index) had stable performance relative to other China-focused indices. Between 2 August 2021 (ETF's listing date) and 31 March 2024, the Index cumulatively outperformed⁴ other China-focused indices (Figure 2) such as the MSCI China Index and the Shanghai Shenzhen CSI 300 Index as of 31 March 2024.

Between 2 August 2021 and 31 March 2024, the Lion-OCBC Securities China Leaders ETF also cumulatively outperformed⁵ other China-focused ETFs listed in SGX (Figure 3), such as the Xtrackers MSCI China UCITS ETF and United SSE 50 China ETF as of 31 March 2024. The cumulative outperformance (as of 31 March 2024) can be attributed to the Index's exclusion of American Depositary Receipts (ADRs).

The exclusion of ADRs is thus expected to reduce the Index's exposure to foreign regulatory risks, that can adversely affect US-listed Chinese firms. By providing diversified exposure to industry leaders listed only in HKSE, SSE and SZSE⁶, the Lion-OCBC Securities China Leaders ETF is less vulnerable to foreign regulatory risks and better cushioned against the broader market volatility.
